

Occupational hygiene monitoring of methanol and ethanol

Principle

The procedure utilizes sampling tubes containing a silica adsorbent. When air is sucked through the sampling tube using a calibrated precision air sampling pump, the alcohols are adsorbed to the surface. During analysis the alcohols are extracted from the adsorbent and analyzed using gas chromatography.

